There is no one juyle definition of notionalism, nor roce.

Nationalism is a constructed ideology, as the is its counterpart, race. Thus the role of race in farming nationalism is clear - just as nationalism is defined by culture, showed Language, and herotoge, nationalism is defined by vaces.

A.D. fruth in force A rigues that this 'second yor of instanalism', one instanals by appeals to ethnicity nather than a desire for civic cooperation, is merely a historical phenomenn, and to lay, entirely 'irrelevant'. Haverer, a server counterargument can be consmicted here in the face that the nationalism we experience for commonly today, as demonstrated by the rise of congervative portitions such as Brightin Brisanar, or concern over immigration or demanstrated by D. Trilling in frace E2, has been staped significantly by our past treatments of me and the racial designations that we, in contradiction to Resource of a poor colonial notionalism' as discussed by J. Tosh in force & pries that vace has, and romains, our important factor in the shappy of nationalism.

As stated by P. Spoonley in gourse E1, nationalisms

Typically identifies national boundaries with racial boundaries

or with specific racial interests. Indeed, this argument

Descripted by the historical treatments of race, was as discussed by KJ Evons in source D. The presence of the White Manis Powden and his desire for cultural and national aggrandifement through the conquerny of indigenous societies and be civilization of theathers' there has created a distinct historical separation between the politicul interests of separate races & ethnicities, and trus created a Nationalism motivated entirely by vace It D, of course, ago important to note that a shored culture also plays a role on the formation of nationalism. Howar, the notionalism creatal by socio-economic groups and their interests also per hold significant interplay with the issue 1 race. A distributed by C. Colley in some C, religion played a large vole in occuting portriotion arrang peoplants. Although Colley appears to one the development of nationalism to shared ideals and volues as inspired by the church, we may lost further beyond this orgument to realize that the socia-economic groups as described by Colley were your reperated by race or skin colour. The for example the events of the Lorendan - Burumli Genocide, wherein a revolution was interated by the economic grievances acoted by arbitrary vacial designations to agriculture is honticulture based a Bulgian engenic beloop. Thus we may see that even as historians such as Colley cite cuttural and religious factors as the oceators of nationalism, race remains interently intertwinul in the factors, and then a buy demonstration of the rule race plays in the formation of notioningmi

Moreover, the discussion of the hortzanalism as an 'imaginal potetical community' (Benedict Anderson) further supports the argument that race plays an underiable rule in the formation of nationalism. D. Connadire in form H agres that these 'imagined communities' relied invortably upon the many actured myths and invented traditions of the papert, rattor than perhaps the deep-seated cultival and historical pulls of ethnic / racial groups. Here, ne may see distinct seperation between a circ nottandigm, a degire for one's country to act as a functioning nation-strike based in the active participation of the peoples, and the emic and cultural nationalism greenent with Renor's judgment that the progression of historical studies in dangerous to nationality (source #1), the role of race in circic nationalym is very different to its role in cultural & ethnic nationalisms. Race plays key role in the formation of these latter nationalizms, as organd by I. Shapiro in jource G. French Canadians, Zulu fruth Africans, as well as forbion Yugoglams to name a few, are invariably pulled by their ethnic applications to experience a seperate, often for more dangerous, nationalism. Take for example the genecide within and dissolution of Jugoglavia, wherein the 'manufactural mythe' of Battle of Logoro writerated their notions of nationalyn and vergeence to fun an extent overshelmed any notions of a ciric nationalism entirely. may be that race underiably plays a key role in the Jamatian of authoral and ethnic nationalisms.

Moreover, the construction of the inleading of a White Identity! as discussed by D. Trilling in source E2 further supports the orgament that race has played a significant role in the construction of nationaligm as he know to Kangmann establishes the 'White Identity' as itself one of the manufactual myper' of nationhood, and thus an instrument with which nationalism is upheld. Therefore, we may see that the organists of jource O and E2 substantiale each other onl thus become more reliable in our argument that race his shaped nationalism significantly. The concept of a monteress' uphilds historical distinctions between class, role, and sense of belonging untern a notion, and this affect enterely the significant nationalisms that arise from the shorel experiences of these socio-economic groups. In addition the recent publication of come E2 allows for the hereful of historical hundsignt in supporting its arguments; in contrast to other fources which were partieges influenced by the current event of their times, such as Anlegen / Hissbarn who were invally influenced in their exporte to ment puch as the mass morement of the foriet peoples and the fu of re hon Centain.

Thuefore, it can be concluded, though our aways of the provided historical einterness that race played, and stud played, and stud played, a key role in the devolupment of nationalism.

Begin your answer to Question Two here:

Within one overall, the historical relationships of things cause is effect and charge of continuity in the Dreyfus Affair may be identified in aiding air unless couling of the historical tensions between race and nectionalism that occurred in the political follows of the Drypus Affair.

In particular, ne may identify aspects of cause and effect in that the cause of pre-existing historical sorte-securityon and anxieties jurrounding the national adentity and nelyane of France injurenced the treatment of the Dayfus as on enony of the state, and letter on the developments to divided French political opinion that Dragges Appain provokal. In a period of transition, when France was politically divided already pollowing the cours of the Founds Bevolution, tonziano y race and nationality had projoinel effect on the oracle of and therespect, of the Dryfors Affair. B stated by J.D. Papier in pource J, Drumond's publication La Forme juine held exploshe impact an already deep- gentul prejudious against jurish peoples. The allegations clienssed but few new an olien peoples and that they were to promotes of a destructive capitalism w doubt infiltrated the mainstream of contemporary thought, and influenced the prejudice that eventually resulted in the unjust treatment of Dryfus. The interplay of race onl a nationalign promoted by political thought is aptly demonstrated by Popkin's discussion of the interest accountant held between race and petitical ideology, as the octions actions of the few were well to generalize the publical principles of the thousands. Within this flowed association, we may identify to historical relationships of specific in general, and the costnerophic effect of arecolated Wistirial victorical companied with pre-existing prejudice This historical relationship of cause as racial projudice unvitable by rectionation and effect as the mistrial of Dreyfus is further demanstrated in format K, as Tuchman states that the the form as an eternal alien: a natural suspect to absorb the stain of treeson?

Moreover, it can be seen tent the Draypus appair autal utself as a cause, with its effect being a ferror questioning y to Franch national alertity and an incomfaterle examination of notionalist, vocist prejudices half by the qued population in to nome of potention. As statul by H. Drealt in jource M1, although Franch auto-sometigen was not a primary historical factor in to following European genocale of the femin peoples, the octions of the Vinchy government cortainly confributal to the deportation onl systematic exclusion of few from France and water Everyone countries in the 1940s. Thus, ne may identify the historial relationships of change & continuity in to posistance of tensions symmetrical by race in French nationalism. The is farther supported by source 12, which describes effectively the French military degice to Jorget past mistakes, so the statue would be too much of a reminder of old military fhanc?

Moreover, a key relationship of course and effect convounding pletical tensions between race & notionality in the Drypus Affair can be feen as the recent history of French positial revolution, as the anti-clerical and anti-nulting kelieps w prejent in the period (as described by sources (. $ N), caused the suspicion of Jureign invasion and colonial adventure, crystallizing exertually into the blatant x exophoria and mistant for forish peoples as displayed in the out of the Orcygus Affair. The previous experiences of one's own uper or notion, however anecdotal, cannot be digmissed. It is, therefore, paramaunt to our indestanding of socio-political tonsions to acknowledge the universally republican notion that afore rapidly shifted to a particularist notion regarding the appointion of 'foreignes' in the name of preferring to fer was French national identity waily had only occently been gained though priods of man bland shed and strife for the general people. Indeed, as stated by B Tuchman in jourse K, the agitation or questioning y Oreypus' conviction become quickly to makery of om eveny in the Franch army, and effectively political identity. The effects of the wore of anti-formition quickly manifested in the reactionary movements such as the acation of the Tionist moroment, which to day hells comificant relevance as to confust of Israel - Palestine rayes on. The himsial relationship of course and effect and he identified here in that the events of today's world, and In tisteria tistand historial sicio-political forces that influenced it all stem from, t a certain extent, the past beliefs and tensions that shraniably have been passed down promph generations. Therefore, it can be seen that the tensions between race and nationality seem here in the Dreygus Appir may act as a microcosm to wider historical examples of such tonsions, two further developing air understanding of tensions between race + notionaliza in addition, the higher relationships of differency pospectives may be identified in the tensions of to Drugges Affair. As stated in gourse 11, previous president of the Republic Jacques Chine encapsulated the orthodox perspective of this Affair by proclaiming that the appair, although morally injust and innately wrong ended with the triumph of 'homaniest values of respect and telerance'. His optimistic view services an indepiable nationalist agonda, to unite and parhaps even dismiss the previous divisions of French putual and social perception. In contrast, some M2 agues tent the historical representsion of the prival and the precedent it set for juture trafancit of the James peoples played an underiable role in the development of a Josther wiridel French nettanal identity concurring race, and even a substantial role in the European departation of Jens in WWII, depote P.P. Read's gramento against this. Thus, we may see that the contrasting historical perspectures of past & present aid us in realizing to nature of fensions between authoration and race in, the and beyond, to Drughes Again

QUESTION THREE

Analysing significant historical events in Aotearoa New Zealand allows us to appreciate the complexity of our past.

Using Sources O-Q, to what extent did race play an important role in shaping our nation in 1920?

Your answer must include:

- a convincing argument substantiated by a combination of material from the resource booklet and your own knowledge of nationalism and race in Aotearoa New Zealand during the early twentieth century
- an insightful and detailed understanding of this period.

Roce played a key rue in the development of a New Zedand national identity in 1920, and to pollowing decades. In a period immediately following the effects of NZ Pakelu & Mooni portropation and the fallent of the 1918 Influenza Exiclonic, race and nationalignm people a key roll in shapping our nation. As statel by A. Bell in jource P5, the mutual participation y Moon & Porken in contributing troops of $ WWI should have created a genue of comaraderic among to peoples y ar nation - so often as is referred, the national identity of New Zelonel are formed upon to ANZAC snores of Gallipulli. Indeed, as demonstrated by the primary evidence provided in source O1, NZ participation to the nor care was a jource of great price of many in New Zealand Honerer, Bell's impossible that he must herer fright that the two races fought side by side as comvades' is indicative indeed of a deeper underlying men ethnic and that prevental such camaracteric Jum appearing, as the continuation of all grievances concerning and acquipation, "civilization" of "heatler" races, and seen to discipancies and To Tiviti a Wantargi nea brought to ampijunties of the the forefront of New Zentond's concerns you the return home of Paketa + British trops. Includes the superficial comaraderie os described by Bell, and its enderly by issues, are characteristic of Juture tension in nee relations and New Zarround internal identity today.

Following to New Zenard Was of 1845 - 1872, or well so the successive New Zerland Settlements Act of 1873 and Nature Cards Act of 1865, the issue of Attack Pakeha lone acquisition and reputriation constituted a key fact of race relations and its role in nationalism in WIN NZ in Lu 1920s. The extended historical gricevanues of the Marin concerning them land loss played a key historical rule in the seperation of races in New Zeoland, and their political ideologies & motivations. The sewly introduced compet of 'soldier jettlements', under which Low has distributed by the government to largely Pakelu veterans, was a key come outrage in New Testand, and further exacorpated ethisic divisions + notionalism surrounding land loss and ownership. As statul by M. forter in jourse P3, when Minister of Cards D.H Gathrie attempted to set asset the Hosking Estate for Maori poldies in 1920, he was foul with immediate and fience opposition from Pakelin. The subtest that Maon should not be allocated this land because they lacked agricultural still demonstrates as enduring persistence of Eurocentric tellige furnitures tel "uncivilized" and "heather" nature of Mari, and is suggestive of the depty-rooted ethnic to divition on the nationalym thy promoted in New Zorland. The emergence of the Rature Morement, a religious seriest which can be geen as a continuance of previous runians - puttal mirements from as. Parituka, or Att. Just climanstrates the prejence of a ethnic tersion - notionalism in NZ. As stated by Min fruth in source P4, the Ratana bold portrails appeal for the ordinary peoples who struggled to survive in to 1920s pariod. The provides a stock contrast to the governmental support provided high for Pakana reterous oul citizens during this period, thus futher plemonstrating to presence of ethnic tensions in NZ of the precedent they at for juture need relations in Naw Jewson!

This & isve of long transportion is indicative of a now insidious issue concerning race in Now Zouland in 1920 and beyond. As previously stated, the may observe a pesistone of Eurocentric, prejudiced racial beliefs in N2 in the corty 20th century. Upon closer inspection, we my elso objecte a more widespread desir for a White New Jewland' port whit. Despite the notions of racial brotharboal and compraderie as promoted by Bell in jource PS, to princing eridence prejented to us in jourse P4 demonstrates a distret seperation between the Assort frontment of Mari is Pakelin pathalians, and thus an imate inability for the two extensionties to object a centry under the neutranalyse of "Ven Zadane". As argued by I flagure in governe G, separate athenications invariably felt a pull towards estimic, rather than ciric, nationalizms. Alongside the continuonce of Lond issues between Morri & Pakela settles, New Jaland in 1920 implemental an immigration restriction amendment act, in which on unsphen policy was uphald: immigrante nece to be of European descente In porticular, to Chinese were excluded from entering N2, is they were deemed "menaces to ta democratic order" of New Joseph. Meliano neve also restricted, as as NZ followed the restriction policies of its sibling country Aenstralia. Along such there immigration phicies, the per early deaths of young citizens in WNI probable procked an increasing concern surrounting to 'negore' of ar nation's people. Among tuse concerns, clear engenic undertones were present. The implimentation of pro-noralist policies fuch as Plunket acturely promoted to welfore of mother and child, in an effort to raise birth rates of Now Bestond citizens and establish of Jevland as a healthy country. Moreover, many children found thangelves being colucated in the mosts of drinking milk and eating well, as the many malnowished school children were sent to 'neight-gain' carryes and An appropriate agricultural metaphor is commonly made here of Josteminy livestock. Indeed, there prelicies of "health", mitivated indoubtedly by engenics and racial prejudices, can be seen as a continuation of more sever assimilation policies, implemental in the 19th century, just as the Nortine Schools Aco of 1867, which aimed to vale Main cultime and Jovereignty through to tracking of European language and ways of living. This, of can be seen that the segislation and government per punded programs of the 1920s held clear impacts on the separation of Main is Paketin, and thus demonstrates te significant role roce played in te Jonnation y Now Jeascoul in 1920 and begand.

The continuation of guest attitudes regarding race and notionalism: in New Zealand are entirely present today, and an demonstrative y the for-reaching impacts of an ethnic and cultural nationalism, divided into the distribution groups: Maini and Paketa. N2's
